

USA Center for Rural Public Health Preparedness

Presents

Communicating Pandemic Flu Risk to the Public

Date: Monday, July 30, 2007

Time: 9:00 AM to 1:00 PM

Site:

University of Texas Health Science Center at San Antonio

Laredo Campus Extension

1937 Bustamante St., Laredo Texas

Second Floor Auditorium

Purpose

The School of Rural Public Health at Texas A&M University Health Science Center is pleased to announce a new training to Community Health Workers and Promotores in the South Texas Border area. The State of Texas recognizes the important role that this group plays in protecting the public's health. Promotores are an important link to large segments of the population along the Texas-Mexico border. This training will provide the tools community health workers need to identify key audiences and design risk messages of the spread of pandemic, seasonal, and avian influenza. The training will provide the participants the opportunity to interact, discuss, and demonstrate their knowledge. This four hour training is being offered free to participants. Program materials and lunch will also be provided at no cost. This training is a non DSHS certified training program that can be applied as 4.0 hours of knowledgebased continuing education for recertification of Community Health Workers.

Training will be delivered in Spanish. Training Materials will be bilingual. Lunch will be provided.

Registrations will be accepted on a "First come, first serve" basis.

For additional information:

Kay Carpender, Preparedness Programs Assistant Director
(979) 845-2387 /e-mail: USACenter@srph.tamhsc.edu

Jill Artzberger: jjartzberger@srph.tamhsc.edu

Annie Graham: acgraham@srph.tamhsc.edu

Keep Texas Safe

